Introduction

The NSW Health Framework for Engaging, Supporting and Managing Volunteers intends to:

- Engender a culture of respect and dignity that is inclusive of volunteers and that recognises the generous efforts of volunteers on an ongoing basis
- Strengthen and guide volunteer management by building on NSW Health's long history of working with volunteers
- Ensure that people who want to volunteer in NSW health services can easily access information on volunteering opportunities
- Optimise the experience of volunteering for NSW Health volunteers, and optimise the value of volunteering within the NSW Health system
- Ensure that NSW Health's approach to volunteering aligns with State and Commonwealth priorities for inclusive social communities.

Volunteering is a fundamental building block of civil society. It brings to life the noblest aspirations of humankind in the pursuit of peace, freedom, opportunity, safety and justice for all people"

Universal Declaration on Volunteering 2001

This Framework includes the following sections:

- Introduction, comprising NSW Health's vision for volunteering, principles for volunteering, scope of the policy and, roles and responsibilities of those involved
- NSW Health priorities for engaging, supporting and managing volunteers and what we will do to support the priorities.

The Framework outlines the responsibilities of NSW Health services and the NSW Department of Health in supporting volunteering within health services. Also outlined are the rights and responsibilities of volunteers working within the health service.

1.1 Volunteering in Australia: Profile and Impacts

Volunteering is defined as 'activities taking place for the benefit of communities, and the volunteer, and is conducted of the volunteer's own free will for no financial payment in designated volunteer positions'.<sup>1</sup>

Volunteers make a significant contribution to the Australian economy and its diverse community by building social and welfare networks that strengthen community life.<sup>2</sup> The benefits and contributions made by individuals and groups within the community go beyond the individual satisfaction of volunteers and those they assist. Volunteering provides significant economic and social benefits to individuals, governments, business/organisations and communities.<sup>3</sup> There is evidence to suggest that volunteering improves mental and physical health.<sup>4</sup>

The Australian Bureau of Statistics, in their most recent report on volunteering found that "...in 2006, 5.2 million people, 34% of the Australian population aged 18 years and over, participated in voluntary work. They contributed 713 million hours to the community doing many different activities and in organisations and groups with a diverse range of interests".<sup>5</sup> The economic value of volunteering nationally is estimated at $42 billion of unpaid labour hours annually.<sup>6</sup> The New South Wales Government notes that "...around 1.67 million people in New South Wales are involved in formal volunteering<sup>7</sup> and contribute an estimated 241 million volunteer hours participating in sporting, cultural and artistic, environmental, health, home and community care, emergency services, community education and many other types of activities and events."<sup>8</sup>

1.2 Contribution of Volunteers to NSW Health Services

Some of the first volunteering organisations in Australia were established to assist the sick and aged.<sup>9</sup> By 2006, 476,000 people volunteered 47.7 million hours<sup>10</sup> of their time to health organisations.<sup>11</sup> Volunteers make significant contributions to the New South Wales public health sector's economic and service capacity from which the whole community benefits.

NSW Health's relationship with volunteers is characterised by the generosity of local communities who fundraise to support local hospitals. Volunteering has united communities and increased capacity to improve health outcomes through the procurement of medical equipment and delivery of patient services. Hospitals and the community benefit from the goodwill, kindness, time, skill, and experience contributed by volunteers to patients, clients, and health employees.

The versatility and diversity of volunteering in NSW health services has contributed to the building of social capital, connectivity, and community engagement and facilitates better outcomes for individuals, health services, and the community.

1.3 Defining NSW Health Volunteers

Volunteers are involved with NSW Health services in many ways. A NSW Health volunteer is someone who volunteers to provide support or services to patients/clients or the service itself, in the context of a NSW health facility or service. Volunteers can work directly with health services, as part of auxiliary or philanthropic groups.

Volunteers perform a variety of activities that contribute to hospitals and other health services in NSW. These activities may include:

- Operating services such as cafes, kiosks, florists or gift shops, to support patient care and raise funds for charitable purposes for the NSW health system<sup>12</sup>
- Assisting with transport and escorting patients to treatment
- Gardening and outdoor maintenance
- Making arts and crafts, providing music and performing
- Undertaking historical research and preservation
- Fundraising endeavours such as for Hospital Auxiliaries
- Meeting and greeting volunteers at health facilities, emergency department volunteers, ward grandparents, and meal assistants<sup>13</sup>
- Running or participating in specific programs, including Pets As Therapy<sup>14</sup>; wig libraries; libraries allowing children and families to access books; Physical Activity Leader Network, assisting to continue low-cost, fall-safe physical activities for older people in rural communities<sup>15</sup>, falls prevention training to English speaking and multicultural groups in the community<sup>16</sup>

- Participating in community events, health promotion projects, cultural arts and community development programs
- Assisting particular groups of patients, such as aged or palliative care patients.

Volunteering roles and locations of work are diverse. Health Services have the responsibility to ensure that the principles set out in this Framework are implemented appropriately and reflect the needs and roles of the volunteering groups working with the health service. Health services should ensure that volunteers are supported in ways that reflect their role within the health service.

This policy excludes:

- Members of NSW Health consumer and clinician engagement councils and committees
- Volunteers involved with independent charities, including non-government organisations outside of NSW Health Services
- Chaplains engaged to provide patients pastoral services
- Students undertaking a formal work experience program

1.4 Volunteering: Current Policy Context

The contribution of volunteers to our sense of community is recognised across New South Wales and is one of the NSW Government's priorities. The NSW Government has the goal of increasing the level of volunteering.

In developing this Framework, NSW Health has sought, where possible, to align the Framework with NSW State, Commonwealth and other relevant initiatives relating to volunteering. Currently the Commonwealth and NSW State Government are developing volunteering strategies.

The National Standards For Involving Volunteers In Not-For Profit Organisations (The Standards) were developed by Volunteering Australia in 2001 to advance volunteering in the Australian community. As the national peak body, Volunteering Australia represents the diverse views and needs of the volunteering sector while promoting the activity of volunteering as one of enduring social, cultural and economic value.<sup>17</sup> The Standards have been incorporated into this Framework where practicable.

The Model Code of Practice for Organisations Involving Volunteers is also a useful guide to developing policies and procedures for best practice in volunteer support and management.<sup>18</sup>

SECTION 2

NSW Health Principles For Volunteering

2.1 Vision

Volunteering within NSW Health maximises the health care experiences for patients and clients, and is rewarding for volunteers and the service involving the volunteer.

Knowing what the volunteer role is, and the expectations of that role, allows both volunteers and paid staff managing the volunteer program to monitor how well the program is progressing. For example, the roles and expectations of volunteers assisting in feeding patients who are unable to feed themselves are quite different to volunteers conducting fundraising activities. These two groups of volunteers have different training and support needs.

2.2 Principles

The following principles<sup>19</sup> developed by Volunteering Australia are supported by NSW Health:

- Volunteering benefits the community and the volunteer
- Volunteer work is unpaid
- Volunteering is always a matter of choice
- Volunteering is a legitimate way in which citizens can participate in the activities of their community
- Volunteering is a vehicle for individuals or groups to address human, environmental and social needs
- Volunteering is not a substitute for paid work
- Volunteers do not replace paid workers nor do they constitute a threat to the job security of paid workers
- Volunteering respects the rights, dignity and culture of others
- Volunteering promotes human rights and equality
- Volunteering builds the capacity of individuals and organisations
- Volunteering can be a pathway to further education and/or paid employment.

2.3 Commitment to Volunteer Rights

NSW Health will ensure NSW Health Volunteer's rights are upheld. Specifically, NSW Health will ensure that volunteers working within health services:

- Are able to work in a healthy and safe environment
- Are engaged in accordance with equal opportunity and anti-discrimination legislation
- Are adequately covered by insurance
- Are appropriately reimbursed for out-of-pocket expenses incurred on behalf of the NSW Health service for which the volunteer is working
- Do not fill positions previously held by a paid worker
- Do not do the work of paid staff during industrial disputes
- Know what the volunteer role is, how it will be delivered and what result is expected
- Are provided with an appropriate orientation to the organisation and are provided with sufficient training to do the volunteer role
- Are given the same respect and dignity as paid workers.

2.4 Priorities

The three priorities for NSW Health are:

- To ensure volunteer's work and workplaces are effectively supported and managed
- To recognise the value of volunteers and volunteering within the NSW Health system
- To enhance the diversity and number of NSW Health volunteers.

In Section Three: Priorities, the responsibilities of NSW Health services and the NSW Department of Health in supporting the volunteering within health services are outlined. Also outlined are the rights and responsibilities of volunteers working within NSW Health services.

Priorities

3.1 To ensure volunteer's work and workplaces are effectively supported and managed

Volunteer Programs, especially on the scale that exists within NSW Health services, require clear management systems. "If management gives practical effect to the vision and direction set out in policy, all the other standards will fall into place".<sup>20</sup>

NSW Health recognises the need for a statewide overarching policy on volunteering in NSW Health facilities.

NSW Health has a range of policies and guidelines that apply to volunteers as well as paid staff in statutory health corporations. Managing volunteers within the health system requires compliance with a wide range of law and policy. A selection of relevant policy is outlined in section 4.1. The following are issues relevant to volunteering in health services:

- Privacy and confidentiality of health information
- Occupational health and safety concerns
- Risk assessment and minimisation for the many potentially adverse situations that may be encountered during home visits and respite care.<sup>21</sup>

The United Hospital Auxiliary (UHA), a peak organisation for member Hospital Auxiliaries, also supports member auxiliaries and provides constructive feedback to the Department, Minister and NSW Health services on improving the NSW system, including volunteer management.

Health services have day-to-day responsibilities for managing volunteers engaged by NSW Health facilities. A number of health services have volunteer managers responsible for engaging, managing and supporting volunteers.

Appropriate training is an important element to supporting volunteers working within health services. Providing training ensures that volunteers obtain the knowledge and skills needed to effectively carry out their responsibilities<sup>22</sup> and complies with the National Standards. Training is also a motivator, improves confidence and individual satisfaction. Ongoing training may be required at various stages of volunteering, and depends on the volunteer's role within the organisation.

NSW Health services currently provide various forms of training to volunteers, including:

- Volunteer orientation
- Occupational Health and Safety training

3.1.1 What will we do?

NSW Department of Health will:

- Be responsible for the direction and development of policy on volunteering in NSW Health services. NSW Health will review this policy regularly, to ensure it effectively supports NSW Health services in engaging, managing, and supporting volunteers
- Continue to receive advice from, and work, with the United Hospitals Auxiliary, and other peak volunteer organisations
- Develop Volunteer Program Guidelines for NSW Health services, based on the National Standards for Involving Volunteers in Not-For-Profit Organisations. The Guidelines will include the following:
  - Outline responsibilities regarding the work and workplace of volunteers, including ensuring volunteers work in a healthy and safe workplace
  - Outline model procedures for health services regarding recruiting, selecting, and engaging volunteers

- Outline responsibilities regarding the training of volunteers
  - Outline responsibilities regarding the use of and access to confidential personal information
  - Outline responsibilities regarding motor vehicle, insurance, and out-of-pocket expenses incurred on behalf of the NSW Health service
  - Outline responsibilities relating to maintaining documents and record-keeping, including records relating to volunteering
  - Ensure volunteer orientation is in line with Standards, as appropriate to volunteer roles, and includes the following:
    - Outline the role, functions and responsibilities of volunteers in that NSW Health Service
    - Outline the health service’s commitment to its volunteer program, including volunteers’ rights
    - Outline the relevant policy and procedure documents
    - Provide a guided tour of the Health service, including familiarising volunteers with other volunteers and staff, amenities, basic equipment and volunteer entitlements<sup>23</sup>
  - Provide volunteers with initial and ongoing training on the following issues, as appropriate to their role:
    - Occupational Health and Safety
    - Hazardous substances
    - Fire Safety
    - Security
    - Manual Handling
    - Infection Control
    - Back Care
    - Child Protection
  - In relation to recruitment and retention, guidance on the following issues will be outlined:
    - The nature of work/ programs for which volunteers will be recruited
    - Compliance issues relating to the range of legislation and policy relevant to NSW Health, including anti-discrimination and equal opportunity legislation
    - Pre-engagement reference and/or criminal record checks
    - Model applications forms
    - Document management
- NSW Health services will:
- Manage volunteers according to the Volunteer Program Guidelines, complying with this policy, relevant legislation and other relevant NSW Health policies
  - Implement the Volunteer Program Guidelines and ensure that these are understood, implemented and maintained at all levels of the organisation where volunteers are involved. This includes nominating a staff member/s with the authority and resources to effectively drive the implementation of the Volunteer Program Guidelines within the health service
  - Nominate a staff member who has the overall management responsibility for service-wide management of the involvement of volunteers
  - Ensure that volunteers, volunteer programs and volunteer managers and others are well supported and managed in accordance with this and other policies and legislative frameworks governing volunteer related activities
  - Support health employees by providing training on working with volunteers, including on addressing volunteer expectations and providing mentoring where appropriate

3.2 To recognise the value of volunteers working with the NSW Health system

The outstanding and untiring work of volunteers must be applauded. Recognition of the work of volunteers is one of the national standards for organisations involving volunteers.<sup>24</sup> Not only does this highlight the individual contributions made by NSW Health volunteers, but also raises awareness of volunteering and its benefits. Recognition of volunteers encourages retention of skilled and experienced volunteers.<sup>25</sup>

The United Nations Assembly in 1985 established the 5th of December as an annual day to celebrate the contribution of volunteers and encourage others to volunteer their services.<sup>26</sup>

For many years NSW Health has recognised and thanked its volunteers on the annual Volunteer Appreciation Day and by the NSW Minister for Health at hospitals or relevant conferences. Many health services hold events annually to recognise and show their appreciation to volunteers. NSW Health also publically recognises volunteer contributions and value to the health service in its annual report.

3.2.1 What will we do?

NSW Health Department will:

- Continue the tradition of Ministerial recognition of volunteers through the NSW Health Volunteer Appreciation Days.
- Continue to advise the Minister for Health and Department Senior Executives on NSW Government and community volunteer related initiatives

NSW Health services will:

- Acknowledge volunteers' contribution and achievements by hosting a function for volunteers annually
- Organise an annual meeting between the Health Manager and volunteers, to discuss any training needs, achievements, concerns or suggestions about their role or the health facility

3.3 To enhance the diversity and number of NSW Health volunteers

The New South Wales Government has the goal to increase level of volunteering in NSW.<sup>27</sup> Volunteer programs should reflect:

- the local community
- the nature of people's work and leisure
- what influences individual's capacity and commitment to volunteering (either full-time or part-time) and
- strategies to accommodate high and low volunteer turnover.

Volunteers bring a rich pool of potential skills and experience to match against the functions required by the health service, including cultural, gender, generational and employment status.

The NSW Health Department has a volunteering website that provides information to the public on ways to volunteer in NSW Health services. More information can be found at <http://www.health.nsw.gov.au/aboutus/business/volunteering> .

Some examples of volunteer appreciation activities

- A "Bandaged Bear Cup" was held to recognise staff and volunteers of the Children's Hospital at Westmead. A feature on the NRL schedule and initiative of the ANZ Stadium, the Cup was contested by the Canterbury Bulldogs and the Parramatta Eels. (23 August 2008)
- Christmas Cake and Carols for hospital supporters and volunteers (Northern Sydney Central Coast Annual Report 2007/08).

3.3.1 What will we do?

NSW Health Department will:

- Support health services to promote and support volunteering generally as well as cultural and generational diversity in volunteering through maintaining the NSW Health volunteer internet website
- Consult with health services to develop a Minimum Data Set (MDS) to collect information on Volunteering within NSW Health services
- Compile the annual return by health services on the numbers of volunteers, and the proportion of young and/or Aboriginal and/or volunteers from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds

NSW Health services will:

- Promote and support cultural and generational diversity in volunteering by;
  - Encouraging younger people to become volunteers in health services
  - Establishing communications with local community leaders to promote and develop cultural and generally diverse volunteer programs
  - Reporting annually on the numbers of volunteers, and whether there has been an increase in the proportion of young and/or Aboriginal people and/or volunteers from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds
