How palliative care can help

If you have an incurable or terminal illness, your local palliative care service can provide you and your family with support such as:

- 1. A nurse calling you or visiting your home to see how you are going;
- 2. Help to manage any physical problems such as pain, so you are more comfortable:
- 3. Help to understand how some things might change things such as taste, how much food you want to eat, your energy levels;
- 4. Talking to your family members if they are tired or distressed;
- 5. Help to talk to doctors and other health providers;
- 6. Help to understand all about your medications what it is, what it does and when it should be taken;
- 7. Help to understand your options for treatment in Australia and helping you to choose what is best for you;
- 8. Arrange for you to have equipment to help you in your home, including a hospital bed, shower chair, wheelchairs etc (a small cost may apply);
- 9. Arrange respite in the home for family and carers, so they have a chance to rest;
- 10. Help to understand where finanical help can be available, and how to access it;
- 11. Help to meet spiritual care needs and manage grief;
- 12. Help to find other services you may need.
